Boston. Third installment of Boston in Slavery Times. Deals with religious freedom and "humanitarian progress." Notes petitions for the abolition of capital punishment, specifically one by Henry C. Wright. Tells of opposition by the clergy to opening the Boston Public Library on Sunday, and the founding of the Free Religious Association on May 30, 1867. Explains the hatred of the clergy for Theodore Parker. One minister said that Parker's illness and death was in answer to a prayer for just this result.

To Lilian [Whiting]

[Melrose, Mass.] The writer says Miss Whiting can quote from a conversation they had about the Spanish-American War. Thinks war can occasionally be justified. Cites Marathon, the wars of the Reformation and the Civil War, in support of the Hon. Carroll D. Wright's belief that "war is God's missionary".
